

Some writers of yesteryear have called it the giant leap; others, the great experiment. One referred to it as a leap into the vast unknown. All of them were referring to the founding of the greatest nation in the history of mankind.

On July 4, 1776, a nation was born that stretched the very sinews of political reality. Thirteen separate colonies united to establish the very first democratic republic and faced very questionable odds of being successful. But men of great integrity, women of exceptional resolve, and faith in a God bigger than all obstacles combined to create a nation unlike any before it—a nation not merely a product of man's intellect and ingenuity, but a nation conceived and brought about by the very act of God.

This infant nation not only survived but thrived, facing formidable foes from the very beginning, yet finding triumph and victory through courage, commitment, and constant vigilance against the enemies of liberty and freedom.

This nation, the UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, is the greatest and last bastion of freedom and protection against tyranny and political oppression. "America is great because America is good. If America ceases to be good, it will cease to be great." — Alexis de Tocqueville.

But America is good only because of her trust in God! "In God We Trust" must be much more than a national motto. It must be our national character!

Happy America 250! —Joe Eason
